

Abstract

In a device for determining the ametropia of an optical system (1), comprising a controllable optical element (2), the objective and subjective determination of the correction values are more closely integrated, a measurement and control apparatus (3) forming a closed-loop control circuit with the controllable optical element (2) and the optical properties of the controllable optical element (2) being manually modifiable.

(Fig. 1)